

We can not have both hope and fear. Which will we choose?

Most people don't believe in justice as the basis of foreign policy. Ask them why?

Voices from Two Different Stories:

FEAR (STRATCOM) believes that people will select the way of force and violence because it offers the promise of false security. Yet he sees that love and kindness is more effective over the decades. The way of violence seems to be creating many new enemies and make us suspect in the eyes of our allies.

HOPE: I try to be kind and loving always. I wish our government were that way. If given opportunity, with threats removed, people will select the good and share with each other. To people who give attention to their highest and best self, war is anathema, and imperialism is a violation of all that is right and good. Which will we choose: LOVE? or FEAR?

Comments: ■ The American people will soon have to make a choice between policies of kindness or power.
■ StratCom has been actively seeking the total domination of space, because whoever controls space controls the earth. Even a change in U.S. Administration may not be able to shift StratCom off its dangerous course. Militarism is firmly entrenched in our system. ■ There will be no peace with justice until unselfish and informed love is structured into political processes and international arrangements. — The United Methodist church, USA General Conference. ■ World Peace is inevitable. — Teilhard de Chardin.
